A Promenade in Broadway.

What signifies this pomp and sway To me—I'm of too common stock I deal out sugar, tea, and rum, And manage just to pay my rent; My pockets hold a triding sum, Not quite a standing compliment.

My coat is all too brown for that-

Is ancient as our liberty—
My boots unpolished tread the earth— My very being, one may see,

Am thus the sport of fortune's frown, My soul is proud-the boly sky That bends above, scarce keeps it down. Misfortune claims my passing tear, And charity unlocks my breast,

Is moulded as of common birth. I wonder why it is that I

Where justice reigns, I have no fear, And laws of freedom I love best.

At Coleman's windows I turn'd round, And mus'd upon the painted life-There rush'd the stag with mighty bound,

My country-trembling o'er the strings

That bind my heart, a tremor run-I thought with pride, with moisten'd eye, This bird and liberty are one.

And proudly through the sulphrous sky

Or Bunker Hill and Lexington, Look'd down on fire, and blood, and steel,

And cheer'd the staggering columns on, And made the dying martyrs feel

That God or freedom must be won.

As thus I gaz'd upon thee there;

That spreads our banner to the air. But what is poetry in the street,

Where auctions all are "going," "going,"

Is "clams," or "charcoal"-plainly showing

How music weds a common theme— And then the "Transcript," sir, or "Sun," The sancy "Herald," have you seen,

All-caught by walking down Broadway-Some lightning, too, from black eyes stole, It serves to light me on my way.

From the New Orleans Commercial Herald, April 29.

THE EXECUTION.—Soon after 11 o'clock yesterday morning, Thomas Tibbets, convicted of an attempt to murder ——, the coffee house keeper on the Levee, was hung in the open space near the canal, at the end of St. Louis street. He was conducted to the place of execution from the Calaboose on a cart, (containing his coffin), and displayed throughout the most extraordinary coolness and firmness, on the road to the scene of his departure from this life; he frequently turned round in the cart, and requested the crowd of persons who were eagerly thronging around the vehicle, to keep back, and not to press upon the guards, who were escorting him to what he considered a triumph, rather than a disgrace. He requested some one to furnish him with a piece of tobacco, which seemed to be the summit of his earthly wants, and having received it, resumed his composed and sang fixed remover.

arms were bound with cords behind, and his hands tied in front, he leaped from the cart, and shaking hands with the marshal, walked deliberately but boldly on to the scaffold. THOMAS TIBBETTS .- This extraordinary individual whe was hung yesterday morning, was born, we believe, in this state. However, be that as it may, he has spent the best (or rather worst) part of his life in it. At the age of ten years, he was a drummer boy it. At the age of ten years, ne was a drommer boy in the army, and was stationed with his step father, (a corporal) in Louisiana. Having been beaten, as he says, very severely by his step father, in a fit of revenge he seized a musket and laid him dead at his feet. For this he was tried and sentenced to be imprisoned twenty-one years; the sentence of death being thus commuted on account of his extreme youth. After remaining in prison for the space of eleven years, he was in January, 1836, being then but twenty-one years of age, pardoned out by Gov. White. He arrived in this city just at the time that the Louisiana volunteers were about to embark for Florida; and having lunteers were about to embark for Florida; and having enlisted under Col. Persifer Smith, he went with him to Florida. After serving there for four or five months, he returned to this city, and almost immediately went up the river; he returned here, however, in about a fortnight after, and had not been in the city three days ere he committed the crime for which he yesterday forfeited his life.

Three days since he was visited in prison by the Mayor Denis Prieur, who asked him how he felt.
"As well as a man in my situation can feel," was his answer—"but I should like to have something to

Some brandy was brought him, which he drank eagerly; after which Mr. Prieur told him that he did not come for the purpose of giving him any hopes of

And if you should do so, I'd not believe you,

"And if you should do so, I'd not believe you," said Tibbetts.

"Would you not prefer imprisonment to death, and that death on a scaffold?"

"Oh, no!" said he, with a bitter smile, "if my sentence could be remitted for only one year's imprisonment, (and I know that they would not let me off for so short a period,) I would prefer to die instantly."

"Life is said to be sweet," observed the mayor.

"Aye, it may be so to you, and such as you, surrounded as you are by the comforts and luxuries of life. Bat look at me, (holding up his chains.) Eleven long years of my life have I passed in a miserable cell, chained thus like a galley slave, disgraced and deserted by all and everything that could render life dear to me. What sweetness, then, think you, has such a life, for such a person as I am? No, Sir; (seeing Mr. Prieur was about to speak;) as a boy, it is true, I was headstrong and wayward, but not naturally vicious. It is true that I hated those who hated me; but I also loved those who were kind to me. But this I take no credit for; I but obeyed therein the instinct of nature. But upon one occasion, for indulging in a damnable propensity, that corporal (his step-tather) heat me so brutally, that I seized a musket and shot him. I was imprisoned, and led to believe, that if I behaved well I should be released in a year or two; but year after year rolled on, and still I was a wretched prisoner; the bright morning of my life was wasting away, unsolaced, uncheered; no release came, my heart sunk within me—my hopes were blighted, and with my hopes died my youth. I then gave loose my heart sunk within me—my hopes were blighted, and with my hopes died my youth. I then gave loese to the worst passions of my nature, and joined my miserable companions in their worst pursuits. Fi-nally my prison doors were unbarred—I was pardoned —I entered that prison not a de-raved boy—I left it a desperate man. I came to this city and joined the desperate man. volunteers for Florida—before sailing I was arrested as a suspicious character, but being released, went with colonel Smith—returned to this city, and—the rest you know."

Mr. Prieur then hinted that the vice which led him astray was drinking.

"No, Sir;" said he furiously, "gambling! damnable gambling! for that was I beaten by the man whom, in revenge, I killed. I deserve to die, but not for the offence for which I now stand committed. I deserve to die, however, for deeds that I have lately done."

He was questioned on this head, but obstinately refused to reveal a syllable. Mr. Prieur, who is, bythe-by, a practical phrenologist, then proceeded to examine his head, to ascertain if the order of form. ness and destructiveness were not strengly developed, and finding such to be the case, he spoke of it. The prisoner said nothing in reply to him on that head then, but the day before yesterday, he asked for pen, ink and paper, and wrote the following:

"My LAST WILL AND TESTAMENT.

"Give Dennis Prieur my Head.

whose presence I shall shortly be hurried. And now hang me as quick as you can."

He then seated himself, and in an instant the platform, chair, &c., fell, and the negro who efficiated as executioner, (never having before efficiated on a similar occasion.) not checking the rope in time, Tibbetts fell to the ground, which he struck first with his feet, and then with his knees. Such was his determination to die, however, that he drew his legs up, and kept them in that position until, as we presume, the vital spark was extinct, when they again fell to the ground. He was suffered to remain in that position for several minutes, when the negro very leisurely laid hold of the rope, and hauled the wretched creature up a few feet from the ground, where he continued to swing round, and round, blown about by the wind, having no cap over his face, and his features being exposed, the whole of the face being distorted dreadfully, with the tobacco juice running out of his mouth, rendered him a ghastly and shocking spectacle.
